The WVU Personal Rapid Transit (PRT) is significant as the first large-scale, automated guideway system in the U.S. and was a 1970s groundbreaking federal research project by the Department of Transportation and Boeing to test future urban mobility, using small, automated, electric vehicles (pods) for on-demand, non-stop personal transport for university campuses, influencing future urban transit concepts despite its unique niche, and becoming an iconic, enduring solution for campus mobility in Morgantown for over 50 years. While traveling south on the bus, we recommend viewing this U-tube video of impressions of the PRT made by specialists in urban transportation:
